Jasmine Dominish Therapy Assistant

Jasmine is a third year Psychology student at Macquarie University with a passion in disability support and innovation in psychology. Jasmine has gained experience as a tutor, carer and support practitioner for children and adults with disabilities and mental health disorders.

She has worked as a disability support practitioner in adult group homes and has completed student placement with a team of Behaviour Support Specialists for people with disabilities. Through this experience, Jasmine has learnt to apply comprehensive support and therapy strategies jointly with promoting well-being.

Jasmine hopes to continue studying an honours degree, followed by a master's in clinical psychology. She aims to develop a career working with children, adolescents, and families, with a special interest in working with people with disabilities to foster improved accessibility and support.

Jasmine aims to develop quality therapeutic relationships through effective communication and listening. She enjoys bringing a sense of humour and authenticity to as many situations as she can. Jasmine is outgoing and detail oriented. She loves animals, nature, and art. In her study of psychology, she is passionate about subjects including diversity, ethics, counselling, relationships and childhood psychological development and interventions. She can speak English and French.
